PhotoShop Elements is a simpler, cheaper, and smaller cousin to Photoshop, though the two use some of the same features. The most basic version of Photoshop comes with a standard storage card that holds all of your images, but you can buy a larger version in a box that stores all your images. Figure 2-2 shows Photoshop CS2 on a DVD. Figure 2-2: The Adobe Photoshop CS2 DVD image. Photoshop CS2 on a CD is smaller than the DVD version; here's an example. Photosnap is a Windows-based application that can allow you to read, edit, and create digital snapshots without ever getting near a computer. Once you purchase and install the program, you can then connect to a camera's memory card and either preview or edit your images. I recommend using Photoshop CS2 because of the more intuitive, visual interface. However, if you're trying to cut it on a budget, Photoshop Elements is a great option. It's the budget version that costs much less (and may fit on a CD or DVD). The rest of this chapter focuses on working with Adobe Photoshop CS2 because it's a good choice for the beginning user, but you can find hints in the sections that follow for working with Photoshop Elements. Creating New Projects Creating a new project usually means starting a new document and doing all the tasks needed to begin creating one. Start by opening the appropriate program and creating a new document. Click the File⇒New option on the menu bar and choose the type of project you want to create. Figure 2-3 shows the New dialog box where you can specify a project name and location. Figure 2-3: You can easily start a project with just a click. After you create a project, you can open it at any time, but I suggest you keep your projects open until you're done creating them because they can save significant time when opening a project in the future. Editing photos One of the primary uses of Photoshop is to edit images. You can use Photoshop to alter images in two ways: by cropping them or by enhancing them. Croping an image Cropping an image allows you to trim away unwanted parts of an image. When creating your image, first determine what you want to use or preserve from the image.

The areas you don't want included in the image are trimmed off, leaving your subject

Photoshop Elements, on the other hand, has a more simplified user interface. With its simplified user interface, you can easily create professional-looking photos and graphics on your phone. The interface of Photoshop Elements can be made simpler by setting the color correction filter to Black and White (Image > Adjustments > Black and White). This type of interface will make a lot of tasks easier and faster. To create a graphic design for your website, you need to choose an image editor. Photoshop Elements is a good choice for your website because you can easily create your graphic designs on the go. You don't need a graphics editor when you are creating a graphic design for your website. You can simply go to Image > Image Size and type the numbers of pixels you want your image to be. If you want to create images for your website, you can always save the image you created in Photoshop Elements as a PNG file (Image > Save As) or as a JPEG file (File > Save As). You can also use Photoshop Elements to create slide shows. You can open a slide show in the main folder of the Elements. You can choose Edit > Slideshow > Setup Slide Show. Q: How to use lookup with restricted 'start' values I'm trying to do a lookup between 2 data sets that are an order and parts of the order. How I'm currently doing it is this: SELECT COUNT(OrderNo) AS NUM, MIN(OrderNo) AS ONo, MAX(OrderNo) AS OrNo FROM Orders WHERE Orders.OrderNo IN (SELECT PNO FROM Parts) GROUP BY Orders.PartNo This gives me all the possible numbers from the parts order, and then the minimum and maximum numbers in the whole orders table. What I want though is to limit the lookup so that only OrderNo's >= 1000 will be returned. I've tried doing like this: SELECT COUNT(OrderNo) AS NUM, MIN(OrderNo) AS ONo, MAX(OrderNo) AS OrNo FROM Orders WHERE Orders.OrderNo >= 1000 AND Orders.OrderNo IN (SELECT PNO FROM Parts) GROUP BY Orders.PartNo But that gives me the error: An aggregate may not be used in the WHERE clause unless it is in a subquery contained in a HAVING clause or a select list, and the column being aggregated is an outer reference. Which I can't seem to figure out the best way to resolve. A: Instead of ORDERS.OrderNo IN (SELECT PNO FROM Parts) replace it with ORDERS.OrderNo IN (SELECT PNO FROM Parts WHERE PNO >= 1000) Trending Monero clamps down on 'crypto mixers' Cryptocurrency mixers are sites that allow users to have untraceable transactions, but authorities have become increasingly concerned that criminals could use them to hide ill-gotten gains, like bitcoins. This month, the Digital Asset Surveillance Working Group (DASWG) of the Trusted Initiative (Tide) has successfully negotiated a temporary injunction from the US District Court for the District of Columbia against the site Coinjoint, a recent addition to the already substantial list of businesses being targeted. Coinjoint offers users a page called "0Mixer" that allows them to create a personalised coin mixing service. Users would buy a certain amount of Monero – known as XMR – then send it to the pool. Once the coins are mixed, they are split

[Molecular-genetic characteristics of bovine cytomegalovirus in the epidemic process]. It appears that the more our heads get crammed with thoughts, the harder it is for them to get through the narrow gate of our mouths. The following words of a song can be, and are, translated to mean: "I'll be honest, let's be friends, there's a future ahead of us, let's be the friends we want to be, I want to follow you, and you want to follow me." A song that has not only universal meaning but also adds some humor when you heard it over and over again is "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face." Michael Jackson, in his autobiography Moonwalk, wrote: "My mother had already discovered the Neil Sedaka song and she was having a hard time translating it into Russian. I wish I was kidding. The night she found out she told my dad, "I don't believe we're going to have a Michael in our family." My dad threw his arms around her and said, "How can that be? He's got such a pretty face!" The power of a song can be measured by the fact that many people have written their own songs with the same message. When people sing a song over and over again, they are living it. So we sing to our hearts content. Then that day comes when we are struck by the phrase of a song in a movie. It's like an alarm clock ringing in our subconscious that tells us we need to go back to our hearts. We are faced with the song that comes to us without us even being aware that it is coming to us. After the song is over, we realize it was the song of the movie we saw and the movie of the song of the film we saw. The song will be only
